

NEW TESTAMENTS PRESENTED.—Between 75 and 76 Grade V pupils at Elmwood School received copies of New Testaments during a presentation program held there recently by the St. John's chapter of the Children Society. An additional two dozen Bibles were left for general use at the school. Rev. J. C. Wicks addressed the pupils briefly.

Tooth-brush tricks

A frequent complaint of housewives is that small, irritating household tasks seem to consume an endless amount of time and energy. One of the household tasks in the "small job" field is the family's old tooth brushes. After their tenure of office in the bathroom, tooth brushes have a whole new life ahead of them as cleaning agents. A recent survey by a chemical company listed 22 different jobs a tooth brush could perform with ease and efficiency. If your old tooth brushes are made of nylon you can be assured of even longer service since nylon brushes are strong and hard-wearing.

The advantages of a tooth brush for cleaning floors or sewing machines is fairly well known. And there are practically no cleaning appliances around the house that don't have a spot or corner the tooth brush cannot get to and clean. Frequently a tooth brush is the answer.

The mortar between the tiles of a fireplace is another cleaning problem that lends itself to tooth-brush care, as do tricky corners of windows. Picture frames are easily cleaned with a tooth brush, while intricately patterned silver that seems impossible to clean with a soft cloth, responds readily to the toothbrush treatment. When it comes to children's toys, this method again is helpful.

Even the handle of the old tooth brush can be a help around the house. With slight alterations it may become a non-conducting screw driver, a better opener and even a hole-sawer for garden work.

An old tooth brush can be a hand and indeed, let's take advantage of it.

School trustees worried about break-ins

Trustees Gordon Hatch charged that the Junior policemen were "beginning to look like hit-men" over the recent break-ins at city schools.

"There's got to be some of this about it," he said at the regular school board meeting when Mr. Kenneth's statement came after maintenance supervisor L. D. Boster reported that thirty and twenty break-ins from basement school January.

Mr. Boster held the microphone twice a window in gas entry and then on each of the other two windows to the main entrance. The seventh case in vandalism at St. James school in recent months. "I don't see why teachers need money in their pockets," said chairman E. A. Chisholm, Thompson replied that students hadn't in their decision to attack and smash. He said teachers couldn't carry all the home change alone in their purses every night.

"It's a real problem," he added, "it's faced in every school system."

Superintendent Thompson suggested the board consider setting up a center for city school trustees to hear the numbers would give police "some sort of the grounds it has been broken."

"How can you control that?" asked Trustee R. B. Bost. "I honestly don't feel it would work," trustee R. B. Bost said, "but the board had talked about locking up the grounds during the school year, but after a few years ago the superintendent of this was the solution to the problem."

Chairman Chisholm thought footprints on school buildings could be a sign of trouble.

The current proposal was referred for study to the council-school board trustees. Superintendent Thompson was delegated to discuss the problem with the St. James Chief of Police. The leader, St. James, Man.

Where ignorance is bliss

According to the Gallup Poll of Canada, that limited investigation of public ignorance, half the voters of Canada do not know, or at least cannot put into words, any of the issues of the Liberal-Conservative or the Liberal-Progressive parties. Their ignorance about the CCF and Social Credit parties is even greater. Some 60 per cent do not know anything about the CCF and 70 per cent in the dark about the Social Credit party in Canada, where these parties have their main strength, the percentage of ignorance are 52 and 80 respectively.

Ninety Sask. children killed

7,000 Disabled

"Judging by the statistics, school accidents are more dangerous than the streets," Christian Bial, director of health education for the Saskatchewan Health Department, said. "If we are to have safety policies, they should be in the buildings and in the schools," he added.

Preliminary figures gathered by the department show that two children of school age were struck and fatally injured by motor vehicles on public thoroughfare last year. In addition, 43 children of school age went to hospital with injuries resulting in traffic accidents, and of these 36 were hurt while riding bicycles.

A total of 197 children were hospitalized last year after accidents at school premises, Mr. Bial said.

In comment on the withdrawal of some school safety patrols in the province because of legal liability, Mr. Bial said that school authorities and teachers, Mr. Bial said, "are not responsible for the prevention of accidents, it is important enough, the school authorities might consider engaging a police officer for the job, as they do in Toronto."

The prevention of death or injury to even one child is worth the cost of the job, Mr. Bial said. If school safety patrols were not in place, the cost could be made for home, farm, and school playground safety patrols, because the cost of where the children are being killed or injured.

"Last year 90 Saskatchewan children were killed or injured and close to 7,000 disabled disabling injuries. Let's focus on that tragic problem and concentrate on its worst aspects," Mr. Bial concluded.

Plan for greater sheep production

At the invitation of the Hon. Douglas S. Harcourt, Minister of Agriculture, representatives of the sheep industry from across Canada met recently in Ottawa. The conference was called to plan a program to stimulate sheep production and improve the position of the industry.

In welcoming the delegates, Mr. Harcourt pointed out that sheep production is one branch of agriculture that can be expanded at this time without fear of exceeding the needs of the domestic market for other wool or lamb.

The conference under the chairmanship of S. C. Barry, Director of the Production Service at Ottawa, agreed on a number of suggestions presented by the delegates to increase interest in sheep production, and recommended the appointment of a continuing committee to give the subject further study and develop the groundwork for a broad national sheep policy.

Federal and provincial departments of agriculture were urged to increase their extension work in training young men who lacked experience with sheep in the details of sheep management. Instances were reported where this had been successful with 4-11 Sheep Clubs organized under the supervision of experienced men.

The place of crossbreeding programs in improving production efficiency was explored. It was suggested that more effective use could be made of surplus crossbred western females for farm stock. It was reported that some 50,000 head of western range ewe stock had been exported last fall to the United States. Organized crossbreeding programs using selected head breeds were reported to have shown considerable promise.

Several delegates urged the need of a better system of farm credit to provide capital for the establishment of new flocks in areas suited to sheep raising and to assist present flock owners to enlarge their operations.

The conference endorsed earlier requests made to the Federal Department of Agriculture to give greater stability to the sheep industry by providing deficiency payments on wool, through the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

It was established that there was a considerable potential market for freshly killed Canadian lamb and that a major problem facing the industry was to develop production to meet this demand.

To encourage the consumption of Canadian lamb in competition with other meats and insure its benefits from slaughter or processing, the conference requested that the federal government extend dressed lambs be extended through the National Council of Canadian Meat Packers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Inter-provincial Farmers Union Council and from provincial and federal departments of agriculture and agricultural colleges.

Plane pancakes on farm land

A NATO Harvill plane flown by a student of the Turkish Air Force, Hani Ergun, was forced down in a ploughed field near Homestead, 20 miles west of Toronto at 6:40 p.m., when it ran out of gas. The pilot escaped unhurt.

A maintenance crew from Moose Jaw drove up to take charge of the plane.

The propeller was damaged in making a "pancake landing". RCMP of the Regina detachment guarded the aircraft until the maintenance crew arrived. The student was flying to Moose Jaw to Outback, Saskatchewan and return. Due to the heavy blanket of clouds he was unable to find Saskatoon and was forced to land where he attempted to make the emergency landing. The Enterprise, Toronto, Ont.

Vegetable marketing plan rejected

Manitoba's vegetable growers, by a narrow margin, voted against establishment of a vegetable marketing plan in the province. While 55.23 percent of those voting wanted such a plan, a 60 percent favorable vote is required by law to bring one into operation. A 44.77 percent vote was required against the plan.

The figures were released by the Manitoba Marketing Board which, under the Natural Products Marketing Act, is empowered to conduct promotional marketing plans.

Of the 863 growers eligible, 761—or 88.1 percent—cast ballots in the mail vote. Of those, 417 favored a vegetable marketing plan, 343 were against it, and there were six spoiled ballots.

Commercial growers eligible to vote were those who, in 1957, grew at least four acres of vegetables for sale. Those who normally fall into the four-acre category but who for some valid reason, didn't grow a vegetable crop last year, were given right-of-vote in the revision committee of the Manitoba Marketing Board.

Indian hospital accredited, serving Local Treaty Indians since 1936

In a letter addressed to Dr. J. North, Zone Superintendent, Dr. Kenneth B. Babcock, Director of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals stated that accreditation had been granted to the Qu'Appelle Indian Hospital for a term of three years. A survey was carried out on behalf of the Commission in November, 1957, by Dr. A. L. Swanson, Executive Director of the University Hospital of Saskatoon.

This credit ensures patients of the best quality of care. In an accreditation survey, such features are checked as the hospital building which must be clean, well maintained and free of all fire hazards, and having first aid equipment to deal with the other patients. Adequate up-to-date diagnostic facilities as well as employment of highly skilled technicians are stressed. Importance of proper functioning of auxiliary departments of Pharmacy and X-ray are emphasized by the Commission. Notwithstanding the department and services mentioned, it is of the utmost importance that good nursing care be provided. Also that the medical staff is organized to ensure that there is a constant review of professional work. Patients are also assured that an accredited hospital is well planned.

Accreditation is a special stamp of the highest quality of care.

The book list is available at Provincial Library. A new book list titled "Understanding Education" is now available at the Saskatchewan Provincial Library, according to Mary E. Donaldson, provincial librarian.

The list was prepared to help the average citizen gain background information in a vital subject. Topics covered in the book list include: The Power of Ideas, Ferment, At Home and Abroad, The Teacher in Life and in Story, Special Problems and Living and Learning.

The book lists are available at the Provincial Library, Administration Building, Regina, without charge.

Canada's Mountain Search and Rescue School Rugged Workout in the Rockies

A column of Warden and RCMP strike out for Mt. Victoria Glacier in the Lake Louise area of Banff National Park on the first leg of a rugged two weeks' course in the Mountain Search and Rescue School. This feature was inspired three years ago to make Canada's National Parks safer for mountain climbers and ski enthusiasts and to provide for quicker and more efficient rescue of those who become lost or trapped.

Canada's National Parks offer some of the best mountaineering country in the world regardless of whether the hiker is seeking a magnificent view or the most demanding of challenges. Park Wardens, who go to the rescue of the unsuccessful, must be thoroughly trained, as surefooted as goats, for when lives hang in the balance, there can be no margin for error.

One of the grave hazards which stalks any mountain climbing expedition is the danger of falling into a crevasse. Above, two Park Wardens demonstrate the proper technique for helping a trapped climber reach the surface.

Two members of the class practice lowering an "injured" man down a sheer 200 foot cliff. The metal baskets type stretcher is guided off the edge of the cliff by a rope fastened with pitons and belayed from above.

IMMIGRANTS ENTERING U.S.

In an age when professional and technical skills constitute a national asset of ranking importance with natural resources, it is disquieting to learn from a study prepared by the National Science Foundation at Washington that of the highly-skilled or professionally-qualified immigrants entering the U.S. each year from all countries since 1953, less than 25 per cent to 30 per cent are Canadian. According to the Foundation's study, the number of Canadians with professional or special skills has ranged between 3,500 and 5,000 annually over the last several years.

So serious a drain on Canada's intellectual resources cannot fail to arouse a profound sense of concern among those who recognize that this country's future progress and, indeed, national security itself, are directly related to the quality and volume of highlyskilled and professionally-trained workers.

GRANDMA WON MANY A BAKING CONTEST

It's amazing what Grandma could do on that quiet old wood and stove she had... I often wonder what she might have done on an electric range... and I sigh for the cakes she might have baked... Had she cooked electrically.

Nothing measures up to Electric Cooking. It's easier... cleaner... faster... safer. Puts and pans dry thing and clean... and so does your kitchen. Electric cooking means less work, more pleasure time and more safety. There's no gas leak. Set a dial, flip a switch, and you cook automatically. Every day, and in every way—you cook better, when you cook electrically.
